CHARLIE & ELMO'S WHISKEY BAR

Elmo and Charlie. Two dreamers carving a life out of the rolling plains of Kansas. Grandpa Elmo, with his chewed cigars and dapper suits, sharing swigs from the mason jar with dusty Grandpa Charlie, his foot tapping a wild tune that only he could hear.

Every year, you'd find them watching the wheat come in at the Soupp Elevator, their harvest eyes accounting for every grain. With the wheat tallied, they'd ease into town in Charlie's Model T and finish their drinks on the porch out front of Schmelhorn Hardware. Charlie stealing glances at the beauty making hats inside while Elmo nodded quietly to passerby. Talking plans a mile a minute they would sit and dream about tomorrow and might rest a while. A parlor where the dust of travel and labor of the plains might be washed away with a drink of two.

More than an Experience Midland Railroad Hotel

In 1899 the Hotel Power (now the Midland Railroad Hotel) was constructed. The hotel became a well-known stop on the Union Pacific line. Vendors and businessmen who traveled the railroad frequently stop at the hotel to setup their merchandise in what is now the hotel's restaurant and whiskey bar.

Tragedy struck on November 7, 1902. Hotel guests tied sheets together to climb out windows to escape the flames. Although Mr. Power wasn't going to rebuild, a committee of citizens (Messrs. Lang, Jellison and Tampier) met with him to find someone to undertake rebuilding the hotel. Samuel Anspaugh, a rancher from north of Wilson stepped up and agreed to rebuild the hotel if the citizens would purchase the site. The Anspaugh's owned the hotel until 1928.

In 1917 the hotel had one of two long distance phone booths as promoted in an advertisement for the Wilson Telephone Exchange. You can still use a telephone booth for calls. It is located in front of Wilson Communications, successor of Wilson Telephone Exchange.

After Mr. Anspaugh died, the estate sold the hotel to a group of businessmen and the Midland Hotel Company was born. Several different owners have graced the halls of the hotel. Many stories has been made and told here at The Midland.

Today you can visit the hotel and stay in period appointed rooms, dine in our dining rooms and walked the grounds of perennial flower beds, vegetable gardens and sculpture gardens. Book your next meeting here in the restfulness of the Smoky Hills.
